Tour 10: Yanacocha and Calacalí

Habitat: High-altitude andine polylepis forest and xerophytic vegetation

We make an early start for the private protected area of Yanacocha. This means wearing really warm clothes. We'll be watching highland hummingbird species as we take our breakfast on the terrace of the restaurant. If we are lucky, the impressive Sword-billed Hummingbird will be amongst them. After 1,5 h we proceed on an easy-to-walk paved trail allowing spectacular views into the Mindo valley. One option for the way back is a forest trail through wet polylepis patches.

The area we visit in the afternoon could not be more different: the almost desert-like conditions around Calacalí enforce specialisation, so we will encounter rare species adapted to such a harsh environment.

Distance: about 120 km drive (one way) and 7 km walking. Starting in Quito reduces the drive to about 70km.

Travelling: by car to get there, walking on trails

Difficulty: easy to slightly challenging due to high altitude conditions in the polylepis forest

Altitude: 3,600 m (Yanacocha) and 3,000 m (Calacalí)

Species highlights:

Yanacocha: Andean Guan, Shining Sunbeam, Great Sapphirewing, Sword-billed Hummingbird, Sapphire-vented Puffleg, Tyrian Metaltail, Pearled Treerunner, Rufous Antpitta, Barred Fruiteater, Rufous Wren, Blue-backed Conebill, Scarlet-bellied Mountain-tanager, Hooded Mountain-tanager, Yellow-breasted Brush-finch.
